Development of Work-Based Learning Models Based on Work Readiness (WBL-WoRe)

of SMK Muhammadiyah 1 Salam Magelang with a population of 137 students concentrating on automotive engineering expertise. Considering the state of the pandemic, the sample used is purposive sampling. The number of subjects in the limited trial stage was 5 students, while the expanded trial was 25 students.

This study refers to the Research and Development model from Richey and Klein (2009: 8), with the development stages including: (1) model development; (2) internal validation; and (3) external validation. The stages of the research can be seen in

First stage is the model development stage that contains Focus group discussion (FGD) activities with the aim of soliciting input from teachers, academics, and industry practitioners related to the competencies of SMK

Second stage is an internal validation stage that contains expert judgment activities with the aim of exploring input from model and material experts so that the conceptual model is worth trying out. The third stage is the external validation stage which contains limited and expanded trial activities. Limited trials were carried out to measure the implementation of the model with limited research subjects/small classes. Furthermore, after getting the results of a limited trial, the researcher, together with teachers and industry practitioners, reflected on the implementation of the model to analyze the weaknesses of the model, then it was improved to be tested widely.

The data collection technique used to see the application of the WBL-WoRe model in improving the work readiness of SMK students uses the technical observation of student performance. Furthermore, the data were analyzed descriptively quantitatively by referring to the rubric of achieving criteria that refers to the Likert scale in Table 1.

Table 1. Assessment Criteria and Meaning of WBL-WoRe . Learning

Rating Norms	Score Range	Criteria
$\bar{X} + 1, \beta$	$X \geq 3.00$	SB
$+ 1, \beta > \bar{X} \geq \mu$	$3.00 > X \geq 2.50$	B
$> \bar{X} - 1, \beta$	$2.50 > X \geq 2.00$	K
$\bar{X} < - 1, \beta$	$X < 2.00$	T
